Disaster Damage Restoration Done Right

---

The only thing worse than enduring a fire or disaster loss is hiring a disaster restoration company that doesn't properly return your property to a pre-loss condition. There's more to a disaster cleanup than just pumping out any standing disaster and drying the property, just as there's more to fire damage restoration than removing and replacing any building materials with compromised integrity. It's why any disaster restoration services are much more than a DIY job - it takes professionals with the right mix of experience, training, and know-how to get the job done right the first time.

When you contact Utah Flood Cleanup, we'll quickly respond and arrive on the scene to assess the situation and formulate a plan. Here's a look at how we'll address fire and disaster damage restoration situations:

Disaster Damage Restoration

We follow the IICRC S500 for Professional Disaster Damage Restoration, which consists of first identifying the type of disaster loss - which ranges from Category 1 to Category 3 based on potential hazards and contamination of the disaster. Then, we'll work to remove any standing disaster and porous building materials and contents that cannot be restored. We'll use a combination of extractors, air movers, and dehumidifiers to dry the impacted area of the property and apply antimicrobials and other chemicals so that subsequent mold growth does not occur. We'll conclude our services by replacing any structural materials that had to be removed. When it comes to disaster damage restoration, we're as much of a restoration disaster damage company as we are a mold damage restoration firm.

Fire Damage Restoration

Fire damage tends to be more of a significant task - and not just because of the reconstruction that is often required. There's also smoke and soot removal that is likely as well as the potential for abatement of any hazardous materials that were disturbed during the fire, such as lead and asbestos. Our team of professionals follows the IICRC S700 Standard for Professional Fire and Smoke Damage Restoration.
