What Causes Mold Problems in Homes?

Mold is necessary for breaking down various materials to enable the reuse of their constituent materials. But, when mold begins to spread inside your home or workplace, it can become a serious health hazard, and it can threaten the structural strength of your house or commercial building.

Mold is a class of organisms that thrive on damp surfaces. It feeds on a wide range of moist substances, such as household foods, wood, paper, insulation, cloth, wallpaper, carpeting, dust, etc. It reproduces by spreading its spores through the air. Mold often develops in homes and business buildings as a consequence of plumbing leaks or roof leaks. But, mold can simply spread by its airborne drifting through indoor spaces and gaining a stronghold on a moist surface.

For the most effective professional mold removal and remediation services, call Utah Flood Cleanup at (801) 416-2666. We will eliminate mold from your home or business, so you can get back to enjoying your life without any concerns about recurring mold growth.

Where Does Mold Grow in Homes?

Mold grows on any moist organic material, such as items kept in closets, attics, basements, or other storage areas where humidity may be a problem. Mold spread is also common in areas where condensation occurs around windows, old plumbing or uninsulated spaces, and in spaces that are wet due to seasonal flooding.

Ceilings and drywall may begin to reveal mold problems. Other surfaces where mold growth can appear include stored files, carpets, books, artworks, furniture, and even clothing stored in basements or attics.

Health Hazards From Mold

Many serious health effects can be triggered by mold problems in a home, especially in infants, children, adults, elderly adults with asthma, other respiratory conditions, allergies, or sensitivity to mold. Symptoms of a reaction to mold can include:

- Gasping for breath
- Nasal irritation
- Coughing
- Throat irritation
- Red and/or itching eyes
- Lung congestion
- Redness of skin

To prevent exposure to mold in your home or workplace, contact Utah Flood Cleanup for help. Our mold abatement experts use world-class professional equipment and processes to ensure thorough mold removal and remediation to prevent any risk of further problems with mold spread.
